The key thing for any of us to do in order to promote justice and equality is simple – it is to see each other as human. Embracing our differences are the key to creating humanity’s best world. Martin Luther King, Jr.’s inspiration was truly great, but it is our job to continue on his legacy by doing our best to promote the equality and justice he preached. I believe that if I continue to see everyone as human and put aside any of our differences, people will mimic and start to do the same. That is why I created this watercolor painting, which shows the lines linking all types of people to the word, “human,” and to every other person representation included in the painting.
