I chose to draw three hands for my drawing. One representing whites, one representing blacks, and one representing no difference between. I chose to draw this because of society manipulating the thoughts of person to person. Just because someone is black doesn't mean he is a bad guy or not as valued, because we are all human. Just because somebody is white doesn't mean they are basic. People may have different minds and do different things, but we all sin. People judge other people by the color of their skin, which they cannot change. Things like this need to stop because nobody is born racist, but we change throughout life influences, like social media. But no person deserves to be judged by their color.
