My original Martin Luther King, Jr. art piece is a cartoon self portrait of myself with a caption at the bottom that reads, "Stand up, Speak out." I made the background black to help make my grays and whites grab the viewer's attention and I drew myself in a confident, superhero type pose to show that anyone can help others. The caption is a fairly simple phrase, but has a very powerful message, meaning to help others by talking or even just sticking up for them, just like Martin Luther King, Jr. stood up for what he believed, I wanted to use a very simple color palette with just gray tones, pink, and blue. I believe you don't need a lot to make a big impact on a piece or a person.
